

I am writing to ask that you not change current net neutrality policy. Internet access has become a necessary utility in order to participate in the workplace and engage in local civic discourse. In my area, access to the internet is already a monopoly. Giving my service provider further leverage to extract money from me, while also limiting access to entrepreneurs with game-changing products is unconscionable. I currently spend more money each month on internet access than I do on heating, and I live in the mountain snows. This is for the lowest level of access speed and data I can buy. This is a utility product and should be regulated as such.
